CHARLESTON, SC (WCSC) - A group of teenagers who lost loved ones in the 9/11 terrorist attacks is in Charleston the week of Feb. 15th to help build a Habitat For Humanity home in downtown Charleston.

Most of them were six- or seven-years-old when they lost either a father or grandparent. "It's kind of hard to explain. I don't really know the words," said Robert Mathai, whose father died in the attacks.

"It's still real hard today. There are so many things that remind me of him," said Brigid McDonald, who also lost her father on 9/11.

"I remember staying up all night crying because I felt close with her," said Jason Vadhan, whose grandmother was on the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania.
